Fertility Enhancement

Initial evaluation

Consultation with couples to analysis of the causations of infertility, review medical records, recommend individualized treatment plan which for both male and female factors.

Hormonal Balance

High FSH level and irregular hormone level prevents pregnancy. The treatment protocols are specifically designed to regulating the functions of our hormones system, therefore influence some gene expression in the brain, thus enhance the ovarian function and egg maturation.

Integrative IVF procedures

Acupuncture before and after IVF procedures will reduce the uterine contractions that typically occur with embryo transfer and may inhibit implantation.

Protection of embryo

Acupuncture will increase the blood flow to nourish the reproductive organs and improve the lining of the uterus. Therefore, improve implantation and prevent some of the risk of miscarriage.

Male factors

Acupuncture can have effect on sperm production and quality without causing and changes in behavior and sexual desire. Studies shown acupuncture can significantly increase the quantity of normal sperm and reduces in structural defects.

Stress relief

Manage the stress will promotes fertility. Acupuncture can stimulating the serotonin release to resolve the depression and relief stress during the ART treatment.

Acupuncture and Chinese herbal medicine have provided natural remedies for infertility that is related to hormonal and physiological imbalances for thousands of years.

Acupuncture stimulates the hypothalamus in the brain to releases endorphins, epinephrine, corticoids and substance P to promote body endurance and blood circulation. Acupuncture has been shown to enhance hormone production, regulate menstrual cycles, promote follicle maturation, protect the embryo, reduce stress and strengthen the immune system.

In addition, acupuncture works in tandem with traditional treatment. Studies show that acupuncture treatment before and after In Vitro Fertilization (IVF) procedures improves the pregnancy success rate. The rate moves even higher if the patient combine the Chinese herbal treatment with IVF procedures.

Western science has accepted acupuncture as a valid treatment. Cornell University’s Weill Medical college found “ there is sufficient evidence of acupuncture’s value to expand its uses into conventional medicine and treatment of female infertility .”

Chinese Herbal medicine bases on each patient’s condition. For women, it is individually designed to regulate hormones, enhance ovarian functions, nourishes uterus and increase mucus secretion. Classic herbal formulas geared toward male patients improve sperm maturation and increase sperm mortality and morphology.

Whether patients opt for conventional medical treatment or not, the acupuncture and Chinese herbal medicine provide a natural and safe option for any fertility enhancement program.
